DEFINITIONS

- Alpha is known as the difference between a fund's expected return (Benchmark) and its actual return adjusted for risk (Beta).
- A smart manager will be capable of exceeding the expected returns, bringing a positive alpha.
Approximately 20% of managers have a positive alpha. The size of assets under management does matter.
- Beta is the measure of the volatility (Risk) of a strategy. The benchmark is always assigned a number of 100.
- A strategies Beta above 100 indicates more risk, any number below 100 has less risk.
- Down capture: downside capture ratio of less than 100 indicates that a fund has lost less than its benchmark in periods when the benchmark has been in the red.
